

15 REAL IDEAS TO ADD $3,000/WEEK

The Hungry Rooster — Summer 2026 — No sugar-coating. Just what's real.

School contracts are out. The carts can't run in this heat. That's real. But you have a proven product, an existing customer base, and a community that is fiercely loyal. The gap is $3,000 per week — that's roughly 6 catering orders, or 15 Shabbat subscriptions, or a mix. Every idea below is something you can start this week, with what you already have.

1 Add a Second Dinner Drop Night

You're already doing one Dinner Drop per week. Add Tuesday or Wednesday. Same prep rhythm, double the weekly revenue from that program. If you're doing 25–30 orders per drop at ~$35 average, that's $875–$1,050 added per week with zero new customer acquisition.

Straight talk: This is the fastest $1,000 you can add. Do it next week.

2 Shabbat Weekly Subscription — Lock In Families Now

Text your existing customer list this week with one offer: commit to 4 consecutive Shabbat orders and get a free side dish on the first one. You don't need new customers — you need your current customers to buy on a schedule. 15 families at $80/week = $1,200/week recurring.

Straight talk: Your loyal base will do this. They already trust you. Just ask them directly.

3 Shiva Meal Coordination with Synagogues

Every synagogue in DFW has a Chesed committee that coordinates meals for families sitting shiva. Get on that list at 3–5 synagogues. When someone passes, the synagogue calls you. Average shiva meal order is $150–$300. This comes in year-round, including summer, because loss doesn't take a vacation.

Straight talk: Call the Executive Director at each synagogue this week. One call, one email follow-up.

4 Jewish Day Camp Lunch Contracts

Jewish day camps run all summer — Camp Gan Israel, JCC camps, private day programs. They need lunch 5 days a week for 30–80 kids. One camp contract at 50 kids × $9/lunch = $450/day, $2,250/week. That's your $3K right there from a single account. They're already in session — reach out today, not next month.

Straight talk: Don't overthink the pitch. Walk in with food and a per-head price.

5 B'nai Mitzvah Kiddush Season

Summer is one of the busiest B'nai Mitzvah seasons. A Saturday morning Kiddush for 60–80 people runs $1,500–$4,000. You need 1–2 per month to move the needle significantly. Synagogue office managers and party planners are booking August and September dates right now in June.

Straight talk: Get in front of the party planning contacts at your synagogue relationships immediately.

6 Corporate Office Lunch Accounts — Walk In With Food

Three to five standing weekly office lunch accounts at $300–$500 each = $900–$2,500/week. The pitch isn't a flyer or an email — it's showing up with a sample tray on a Tuesday and handing it to the office manager. Law firms, medical groups, and financial offices in Irving, Las Colinas, and Plano are 10 minutes from your kitchen.

Straight talk: This takes hustle, not budget. Five visits this week. Follow up every single one.

7 Reactivate Every Customer Who Hasn't Ordered Since April

Pull your order history. Anyone who ordered in winter or spring and has gone quiet — text them personally. Not a blast. A personal message: 'Hey [name], it's Scarlet from The Hungry Rooster — haven't seen you in a while, wanted to share what's new this summer.' Reactivating 20 lapsed customers who each order $50/week = $1,000/week from people who already know you.

Straight talk: This costs nothing but 2 hours of your time. Do it before Friday.

8 Pool Party & Summer Gathering Catering Packages

Jewish families are hosting summer events — pool parties, graduation parties, welcome-back-from-camp dinners. Build a simple summer package: 2 proteins, 3 sides, challah, serves 20 people, $275 delivered. Post it on your social channels and in the Facebook groups where your community is active. You need 4 of these per week to add $1,100.

Straight talk: One Facebook post in the right group can book your next 3 weekends.

9 Synagogue Summer Program Catering

Beyond camps — synagogues run adult education series, teen programs, and family events all summer. These are smaller orders (20–40 people) but they recur weekly and they're easy to fulfill. One synagogue running 3 summer programs per week at $200/order = $600/week from a single relationship.

Straight talk: You already have the community trust. This is just formalizing what they'd happily give you.

Friday Pickup Bundles for the Holiday Weekend Crowd

Summer Fridays before 3-day weekends (July 4th, Labor Day) are a goldmine. Pre-sell a 'Holiday Weekend Bundle' — enough food for Shabbat Friday night AND Saturday lunch. Customers pick up Thursday evening or Friday morning. Pre-orders mean zero waste, and you can take 30–40 orders you'd never get from walk-ins alone.

Straight talk: Announce it Sunday for the following Friday. Do it 3–4 times this summer.

Breakfast Catering for Early-Morning Meetings

Medical offices, law firms, and financial groups hold 7–8 AM meetings that need food. Bagels, pastries, egg dishes, fruit — simple to prep, easy margin, and almost nobody is competing with you for kosher breakfast catering in DFW. One standing weekly account for 15–20 people at $175 = $700/month, zero lunch competition.

Straight talk: Add a breakfast option to the catering page and mention it when you do office visits.

SMS Blast Every Sunday Night

You have an SMS list. Use it every single Sunday to announce the week's menu and any specials. Not once a month — every week. Customers who see your name weekly order 3x more than customers who see it monthly. This doesn't create revenue on its own, but it amplifies every other item on this list.

Straight talk: You already have the tool built. Schedule it for 6 PM Sundays. Non-negotiable.

Referral Program — Cash or Credit

Your best customers know people exactly like them. Offer $15 off their next order for every new customer they refer who places a first order. No complicated tracking — they text you the referral's name, you honor the credit. Word of mouth in a tight-knit Jewish community moves faster than any ad.

Straight talk: Announce it to your existing customer base this week. It pays for itself.

Meal Prep Packages for Families

Summer means parents home with kids, less structured schedules, and the constant question of 'what's for dinner.' A weekly family meal prep package — 3 dinners, feeds 4–6, pickup or delivery, $165 — removes that stress. Sell it as a subscription. 15 families = $2,475/week and you can prep it in batches.

Straight talk: This works because it solves a real problem your customers have right now, today.

Get on ezCater and Fooda ezCater and Fooda are platforms where corporate offices order catering directly. Kosher options on these platforms are almost nonexistent in DFW — you would stand out immediately. Setup takes 1–2 days. Orders come inbound to you. This is a longer ramp (4–6 weeks to gain traction) but it's passive revenue once you're live.

Straight talk: This is the only one on this list that takes weeks, not days. Start it now so it's producing by August.
